GNFAC,

I was up on the far south side of Bacon Rind today, skiing was great. Overcast clouds, temps warmed up throughout the day, light snowfall in the morning and a windy drive home at the end of the day. I dug a snowpit on an east facing slop around 8600'. Nothing ya'll don't know already- we found two surface hoar layers in the top part of the snowpack with an NSF layer in between, it doesn't seem to have enough of a slab on top to do anything yet. I attached a copy of the snowpit.

Hopefully it snows soon!
