

Touchy storm snow

Date

Sat, 01/11/2025 - 10:30

Activity

Skiing

Saw a fairly large (could bury a person) slide while heading up to ski on mt Blackmore. It was on a north aspect at around 8700 ft. It seemed to have failed in the recent storm snow, some wind may have made the slab a little thicker. The debris covered a portion of yesterday's ski track. Higher in the bowl we found unstable snow around ridge lines, with several small loose sluffs coming down.

Region

Northern Gallatin

Location (from list)

Mt Blackmore

Observer Name

Jay Alford