

Untouched snow in the Slush
Representative of the snow
Aspect ENE, elevation 8736

About 14" of new snow has fallen in the Bridger Range. The Slushmans area is still backcountry and this snowpack gives us a good sense of conditions further south in places like Saddle Peak. The weakest layer is the old snow surface. Any amount of wind effect will make the new snow easier to fracture. Photo: GNFAC

Advisory Region
Bridger Range

Forecast link: GNFAC Avalanche Advisory for Wed Dec 4, 2013

Bridger Range, 2013-12-03