

Graupel is like hail. When buried it is a temporary weak layer but tends to bond fairly in a day or two. It tends to roll down hill and pool on aprons and cones. From April 3 north of Frazier Basin: "We felt like someone could have triggered fresh wind slabs in places, especially where the graupel had pooled to a dramatic degree. Other than that the surface snow looked and felt pretty good." Photos: B. Fredlund

Advisory Region
Bridger Range

Forecast link: GNFAC Avalanche Advisory for Fri Apr 4, 2014GNFAC Avalanche Advisory for Sat Apr 5, 2014

Bridger Range, 2014-04-04